Foreign vessels entering a port not opened to trade, or engaged in smuggling or in clandestine coastal trade, are also subject to confiscation by the Chinese Government. For the protection of the revenue, and for the maintenance of peace and order, China has an indisputable right to enact laws for all persons within her dominion, provided the enactment does not contravene any treaty stipulation. In the opinion of Hall, if there is any doubt as to whether certain powers have or have not been conferred by the territorial sovereign, the doubt must be solved in his favour .1 Exterritoriality is, however, inconvenient to the Treaty States because it imposes too heavy a burden on their diplomatic and consular agents. In Peking, the foreign Ministers have not only to perform duties as representatives accredited by their Governments to China, but also to promulgate and enforce laws to govern their nationals in the country. They examine, judge, and decide cases for which Consuls or Consular Courts have failed to find a satisfactory solution, and they are often called upon to issue instructions or to communicate with the Chinese Government on questions which would probably never occur in any other country.² Throughout China, the 1 Hall, Foreign Jurisdiction. 2 Such as conflict of jurisdiction between the Consular Courts of various Powers. foreign Consuls are at once prosecutors and judges as well as commercial agents of their respective Governments; and it is not always possible to expect a person to be equally qualified in judicial training and in commercial knowledge.
